

Leash Pulling and Reactivity

Walkabout
CANINE CONSULTING

Do you have trouble with your dog getting too excited during your morning walks? Is calming down your dog a task that seems like it takes forever?

If you can answer yes to any of these questions, you may have a reactive dog. One of the most common things that reactive dogs do is leash pull. Many dog owners have to deal with whether their dog is a puppy, an adolescent, or a senior.

But, why do they do that?

Chances are, they haven't learned the proper foundation skills that are necessary to help them walk, play, and interact with others in a peaceful manner. They may be scared, nervous, or simply don't yet have the control they need.

Don't worry though, you're not alone. Many dog owners struggle with this exact problem. Although we love our pets as our own, they can be a lot to handle. It's normal to feel overwhelmed, or even angry with your dog when they act out. However, this doesn't have to be how it always is.

What can you do?

Learning how to teach your dog to remain calm in the presence of others, especially while walking, can seem like a monumental task. When you're already stressed out by their behaviour, the last thing you probably want to do is put in more hard work. Believe me, I've been there.

Between taking care of my own reactive dog and helping other owners with theirs, I have plenty of experience in getting these behaviours under control.

My latest course is structured to give you peace of mind when you take your dog in public. You will learn about:

- How to understand the emotions your dog has while being reactive
- How to deal with the behaviours as they arise
- Strategies to calm your own anxiety during reactive moments
- Develop a vocabulary to help you communicate with your dog

When you sign up, you will get workbooks, videos, training, and challenges to help eliminate the stress that comes with dealing with a reactive dog. I want to work with you to help you achieve your goals. SIGN UP TODAY to get started.

If you'd like to learn more about dog training or my services, BOOK A DISCOVER CALL WITH ME TODAY. I can't wait to meet you!

Who am I?

I am an independently certified behaviour consultant for dogs of various ages, breeds, and sizes. Armed with both schooling and 30 years of hands-on experience in shelter, rescue, and vet environments, I work with pet parents to aid them in getting their dog's behavior under control. I am passionate about using science-based methodology like applied behavior analysis to help owners with their dogs.
